

Cringing About Christmas

Left & Right Game

Christmas is supposed to be "the most wonderful time of the year", but I don't always feel that notion is RIGHT.

By the time December 26th rolls around, I'm usually LEFT so tired from the seasonal madness and can't wait to jump RIGHT to a less involved holiday (like Arbor Day).

First of all, I'm LEFT wondering whether it's RIGHT that department stores put Christmas decorations out before the school year even starts.

Now my child thinks he has the RIGHT to have a temper tantrum about the toys he wants RIGHT now when he sees an inflatable Frosty LEFT on display in September. I don't blame companies for capitalizing on the commercialism of Christmas; it's their RIGHT and they wouldn't be doing it if it wasn't what the customer wanted, RIGHT?

This leads me RIGHT to my biggest gripe with Christmas - the presents.

I'm LEFT feeling obligated to buy a token for my
